

July 17, 2006

FTC

To Whom It May Concern:

The proposed rule will seriously hurt my home based business in many ways. I am building a network marketing business with Usana since Oct 2004. My purpose was to stay home with my children and derive an income by marketing our products and business opportunity to others so they too can benefit from improved health and additional income.

My earnings with Usana has allowed me to stay home and be here for my daughters when they comes home from school, participate in their field trips and contribute to her school by joining the schools' PTA. My direct sales business has allowed me to spend more time where time should be spent, taking care of my family. I also enjoyed being able to offer to others the freedom that I have been able to obtain through this vehicle. After all, our society is based on the "Family", where our children are supposed to learn their values, among other things, in order to become useful responsible citizens.

The requirement for this rule steps into areas that violate people's privacy. Others deal with disclosing useless information based on those who chose not to succeed. Why would that be of any use to anyone? As if we do not have enough people around us telling us how we will not succeed and discouraging any worthwhile effort.

Our business offers a legitimate opportunity for those who are willing to work hard and develop their skills to prosper. Please do not jeopardize this opportunity for us and for the future generations.

I was born in a communist country (Cuba) and feel very strongly about protecting our freedoms and rights as well as the principles of free enterprise. I hope my opinion counts as this is the most basic right we have and why I am so proud to be an American.

Jacqueline Ramirez
Silver Director
Usana Health Science